rag-time jam-bo-ree. She thought so much of this home-ly coon, she said that girls so-ci-e-ty, He went and got his liq-uor on, and was you can call on me. He went to her house most ev - 'ry night, for that full as full could be. He start - ed back to that gals house, just on gal did cer - tain - ly live swell. He thought he had her pur - pose for to fight. You'd think a cy - clone good and "pat", so his love be - gan to tell. But this struck that place, the way he tore up things that night. He gal looked up his ped - i - gree, which was'nt ve - ry bright, He was a broke up all the fur - ni - ture, the crock - ry ware as well, Tore the gamb - ling man , a ckick - en thief , and stayed out late at car - pets up from off the floor , like a wild man he did night . So the ve - ry next time this coon came round , She yell . But a big po - lice man tamed him down , And was gave him the mar - ble heart . But these are the words he tak - ing him a - way . He tried to win that sung to her , When she told him to de - part . yal - ler gal back , As loud - ly he did say .

CHORUS.

I likes the place so much I hates to leave . . . . . When far a - way I know I'm go - ing to grieve . . . . . Don't pass me up and let me go , . . . . . Ba - by give me one more show, For I likes the place so much I hates to leave . . . . .
